Art and Utility In Jewelry Boxes

(Continued from page 57) button. Requiring some dexterity to solve its secret method of opening, the box itself suggests the ingenuity of the Carré watch itself and emphasizes the delightful surprise of the recipient.

Then there are very practical purposes that a box for a fine watch must serve. Its velvet and papered interior serves as protection both against shock and abuse. Last, but by no means least, is the consideration of the jeweler in whose hands the ultimate sale rests. Quite naturally he will place forward in his windows and showcases those articles in which he takes the greatest pride. Good, dependable merchandise effectively presented in a fine box of tasteful and appropriate design find the line of least resistance in recommending itself for feature display purposes by the retailer.
