Subject: Not finding "next page" when over 40 topics/page

It is probably resulting from my limited programming knowledge, but I'm somehow not able to find how to move to the next page of topics within a sub forum when there are more than 40 topics per page (i.e. Model Identification). My account settings are set to show 40 topics per page, but that's all I can see.

What am I missing here?

I don't believe we've hit that threshold yet, at least when I looked. 40 is the threshold and if that is exceeded that should give you a "Pages" indicator at the bottom page giving you the link to get to the next page(s).

I guess you are right, but then something else is wrong. There are many topic I can't see anymore. As said in the Model Identification & Discussion section I'm missing many topics, including all the ones I posted. What has changed in my settings then? They are still there as I can see them when I select all my topics however going to the main Forum they don't appear.

I think that when you don't see the topics, fudforum actually thinks you're logged out and "protects" the info. You can see your status in the right upper corner of the page.

Guess a problem with your cookie. Try logout (removes the current cookie) and login again.

We moved your posts and others of the watches correctly identified to the model database based on the year you dated them. Sorry this wasn't stated and I will note that in the announcement.
