The value of a watch is determined by the precious metals (or gem stones) it contains and the premium a potential buyer is willing to pay for posessing the watch. This premium varies greatly by personal reasons, the rareness of the watch or simply the manufacturers name (most stupid reason).
Your watch is gold filled, so there is no real gold value in it. Premo is not highly sought after, usually watches like this sell around 100 Euro. But as said, if you for example sell at ebay and there are two people with personal interest in the watch you might get surprised.
