Artbissell, I've never seen that version of the Columbus logo with the centered W and Cs. That's also about the earliest Columbus watch that I think I've seen.

The Columbus Watch Company in 1889. The building in back with the chimney houses the steam engine that powered all the factory machines via a network of shafts and drive belts. Working in the engine house as a boy was where Fred Gruen got his start in the watch business:
