Hi Jenneke,

thanks a lot for sharing, I really enjoyed the video from start to beginning.
Is it your Techniquadron? Are you the person talking about Gruen in one of his next streams?

Barney

Yes, its mine. Very interesting stuff about the screws. Surprised it was so clean.

I follow his weakly live stream. And he has some nice instruction movies about wachtmaking.

When I brought the watch last year, he asked if I wanted to join a live stream. Because he knew Gruen has interesting watches. Did have to sleep over it. But at the end, its a good way to

I caught a little bit of it live and didn't realize he was working on a watch that was once languishing in my intimidatingly large future projects pile. Glad it wound up in the hands of somebody who got it back in service.

Whaha, I think your message was loud and clear. And if you wont like it, just say you saw it from the finish to the end.

What I dont know if more gruen movement have those widespread perlage, sun burst, black polish, bevelling and chamfering.

Well, large by my relatively small scale. I'm currently down to two wearable watches. Several in need of crystals. I've started to really hate shipping bezels out and every attempt I've made at sourcing crystals to install myself has been a failure. Beyond that several in need of c/o/a and a handful of ground up restorations that I need to get started. The demise of International Dial has put a serious hitch in my giddy-up. I guess I'm going to have to suck it up and go back to Kirk Rich and their exorbitant prices and endless wait times.
