Doubt you will find one in the wild. Your best bet is to pick up a part movement from eBay. If your looking to just replace a broken staff, bite the bullet and get a watchmaker to restaff it. Fix it right the first time IMO.

It was the watchmaker who in the process of replacing the balance staff bent the hairspring. This is my backup plan in case he can't fix it.

Should be the responsibility of the watchmaker to fix it right and get the replacement parts to do it. If he can't fix it, he's not competent watchmaker by any means.

I appreciate you time in offering suggestions but your replies are not helpful.

As said, Ebay is the best place to find a spare movement. I dont think a balance complete has ever been sold.
Not that many 330’s floating around, so not the cheapest movement.

Lets hope your watchmaker can fix the hairspring.
