I have one of those with a different dial, which I'm not sure is 100% correct. I assume at least the "21 jewels" print is missing that yours correctly has and that I have seen on other dials as well.

If you want to be totally accurate the movement is a 3251 and not 325. Cal.325 was the 17 jewel version of this Quadron.

The model name I got with it when a bought it a few years ago was Carlisle, but sofar I have never been able to confirm this.

Pretty watches!

The Carlisle named watch in Mike's Gruen The 1930's book is for sure not looking the same. But Gruen is known for re-using same names for different watches. So, who knows.

I know of a 355 14K model that was advertised as the Carlisle, probably around 1937.

I've owned a couple of this model, and I don't recall them having the 21 Jewel text, so I'm not sure it's incorrect. I also have been lead to believe that these were originally marketed in Canada, rather than in the US.

I was able to acquire recently one of these 3251 Quadrons in a K&O 14k case. Mine is very similar to slinfiniti's. It has a redone dial, but is in otherwise good condition:

This watch seems to correspond to Quadron 155 in Bruce Shawkey's collectors guide.

Movement is over here.
